Ms. Tanaka's class started a recycling project in June. First, the students counted how many plastic bottles were thrown away at school in one week. The number was much higher than they expected. Then they made posters and asked students to bring their own bottles. They also suggested putting a water server near the gym. After one month, the number of plastic bottles in the trash became about half. The principal liked the students' idea and decided to keep the water server. The class learned that checking numbers before and after an activity can show whether the activity really works.

What did the students do first?

- | | |
|---|---|
| 1 They counted plastic bottles thrown away at school. | 2 They bought a water server for the gym. |
| 3 They cleaned every classroom after school. | 4 They made lunch for the principal. |
